It provides legal services to its members, and also helps to provide legislative assistance and advice to other employers and workers. History The organisation was established in 2003 following the launch of the campaign "Construction Worker's Rights" by the then Lord Advocate of Scotland, Lord Hardie, in response to the piecemeal introduction of legislation in Scotland. Its mission is to help improve the working conditions of construction workers in Scotland. The charity was incorporated as an umbrella organisation in 2006 and as a company limited by guarantee in 2009. Activities Abuse of Workers provides legal services to its members and others who work in the building, construction and transport sectors. It does not represent contractors, building specifiers or builders who are members of UK Trade Form (UKTF). It assists in the collection and compilation of public sector information on working conditions in the construction industry in Scotland. It provides information for use in negotiation and negotiations. It also helps to develop the legislation on issues such as working time, access to accommodation, compensation and health and safety on work sites. The spartan market has only one stall. It sells tea and little else. In the wake of Iraq's military campaign to drive ISIS out of Mosul, the city where Islam's second caliph was born, the bazaar has become a ghost town. For many, one indication of the passage of time here is that nothing is sold anymore. "People are afraid now," Nizar Mohammad, one of the stallholders, told DW. "Everyone just stays home." The main reason for that, said Mohammad, is the presence of mines, although the mines are not in the old city itself. "I don't care, I just want to buy something," an Iraqi man said at the stalls. "There used to be a lot of stuff, in particular spices, but it has all disappeared now." There used to be a lot of stuff, in particular spices, but it has all disappeared now Nizar Mohammad, market stallholder Mosul is divided into three parts: the east, controlled by Iraqi Prime Minister Haider al-Abadi's forces, the west, controlled by the Iraqi Kurdish peshmerga, and the old city, which is under ISIS control. On Saturday, ISIS launched an attack on the old city, but it failed. "The terrorists aren't capable of staying here and doing anything, so we will be safe here," said Mohammad. If all goes well, the operation to push ISIS out of Mosul will be over by August 20. According to the latest estimates, 1.5 million civilians are still living in the city, more than a third of them in eastern Mosul. Aerial bombings have already destroyed bridges and destroyed houses, which are now ruined and
