Research on the management of psychotropic medication in the emergency department has evolved in recent years. Psychotropic medications continue to play an important role in the care of the acutely ill psychiatric patient. Well-designed, randomized, controlled studies offer strong recommendations for the management of some conditions, but the number of studies in the area is limited. Suggested practices of the emergency department regarding psychotropic medications focus more on clinical indications than on specific pharmacologic properties. In addition to the clinical indications, an underlying attitude of fear of medications and prejudice based on attitudes toward psychiatry exists within emergency medicine. The ancillary services and attitudes of emergency medicine services may also determine the care of the acute psychiatric patient. More study and research in the area of psychotropic medications in emergency medicine is needed, and clinicians need to be able to recognize and act on emerging data and evidence.Q: How can I be told if someone is browsing my website? I would like to find out if someone (a browser, not a network device) is browsing a web server by its IP address. Is there a way to do this? A: The short answer is that you can't. If you want to do it, you have to be looking at the header information that the browser sends back. There are some web analytics solutions that claim to do this, but I've had trouble with them. If you're concerned about people using your website, I suggest using an URL that will give them a "bad" experience. Q: jQuery AJAX Not Retrieving Values From Servlet I'm having problems retrieving a parameter from my servlet, I'm using jQuery for it and the parameter I want to retrieve is a String. My jQuery AJAX function: $.ajax({ type:"post", url:"HomeClass.do", data:data, success:function(data){ return c6a93da74d
